Scientists around the world are now interested in working together with the societal partners including people in businesses and governments as well as those at home. In this talk, Dr. Yuko Onishi of Research Institute for Humanity and Nature will describe a development of Japan Strategic Research Agenda, which is a list of research priorities for solving the environmental problems. These priorities were identified through the workshop and consultations with the public, local governments, industries, as well as experts. <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gzxlMB7aYFE>
